What to Expect

From Your New Mattress From American Home

Adjustment Period - A new mattress can take some time for your body to adjust. This is normal and can take anywhere from one week to eight weeks. After the adjustment period, your body will get used to the new level of support and comfort and you will sleep comfortably for years to come.

Mattress Pad - The use of a mattress pad may prevent your mattress from becoming soiled or torn, both of which will void your warranty. The use of a mattress pad is highly recommended.

Proper Support - Always use a strong, stable frame. Queen and king size beds require a metal (or strong wood) bed frame with a rigid center support to comply with our warranty. Center supports for queens should have at least one leg, while the king size should have two.

Warranty - Your warranty booklet is attached to the side of your new mattress. Please take a few moments to read this helpful information. Keep your warranty booklet with your receipt for future reference in case a warranty issue arises. Don't remove the law tags from your mattress set. You will be required to provide them to should a warranty issue arise.
